

My favourite teacher by Tereza Okruhlicová

It is difficult to think about and nominate only one person when you are asked a question like this. I am worried about someone getting mad at me for not picking them.

Having said that, I would definitely nominate Mr Jackson. He teaches English and History - my two favourite subjects. He is very smart because he had been studying in England for a few years. His English is beautiful with a slight British accent. History lessons taught by him seem so impressive and absolutely marvellous. He is also very funny and makes the lessons interesting. When he sees us bored, he changes the topic into a short story always starting with 'Alright! Imagine this...!'

His English skills surely have something to do with staying in England and studying there for some time and also with the fact that he has loved studying history. Well, no wonder that he is the best when talking about English history. Also grammar sounds easy for him. And he made me enjoy Ancient mythology more than I could ever imagine. He has a special skill to focus on the topic you hate the most and make you love it.

I think all students like him. I do not know anyone who does not. He is a great teacher and also a lot more fair compared to some others (regarding tests and exams). But he is also friendly and kind and always has time for you when you need something. And moreover, when it is not 'the school time', you can sometimes meet him at special places you would not expect to meet a teacher, just for instance, at a cinema watching your favourite superhero movie.

To sum it all up, he is my favourite teacher because he is smart, wise but also fair and friendly. I wish all teachers were like him.
